Modern Life by No Means Has Monopoly of Virtues.

And Prominent Among the Things It Lacks Is That "Neighborliness" That Meant So Much in the Bygone Years.

Neighborliness is a product of rural ocalities that deserves transplantation to cities, and sedulous nurture there that it may continue to grow. "Who then, is my neighbor?" the man "in the city pent" asks himself, as he regards a row of similar house fronts and reflects on the fact that he has only a nodding acquaintance at best with the majority of the inmates.

Independence is fostered by the conditions of living in the country, Ordinarily we do not need the help of the next house, near or far. But let fire come, or a destructive storm, or a predatory visitor, or a serious illness, and the neighbor may be as wel-

City life is often a battle of the strong, because there are crowds and there are many months to feed and many shuffling feet to be shod. If we let ourselves think of it, the vast multitude of identities striving to estabilah themselves is almost terrifying. Where did so many people come from? Where are they going? How are they o find a lodging for the night? Each f the moving swarm is the center of less deeply unfortunate, has ties that bind him to earth and make life-

Out of the pagen wilderness to the urban lights and roarings comes bucolle youth. What will the city do be that unsophistication? Or in what way will its rugged, innocent power in time come to prevail upon the city? Your shrewdest, hardest captain of usiness closes his eyes at his deak and is taken back to murmurous wa r brooks and bees, to the aroma of hay, of kine, of burning leaves, to the sound of the whetted scythe or he sight of baked apples in the winlow of the weedshed.

After parting in place, the trusces were wrapped with layer of light waterproof building paper, and sheets of expanded metal, with half-inch diamond mesh, were fitted around the paper, and held fiveeighths inch from the surface by chairs and nulls. A coating of one and a half tuches of cement mortar was then applied with cement guns. The roof was covered with a one and a half-inch monolithic slab, built in place by the use of wire-mesh re-enforcing, and cement mertar applied by cement guns from below against wood panels, which were removed after 24 hours. The cement surface was given a final coating of hot asphalt paint.

Saving Coal in Switzerland.

The use of hydro-electric energy for heaters in Switzerland, where coal Is Imported at a high price, is reported to cost only half as much in some in dustrial establishments as heating with live steam. Workrooms are kept at comfortable temperature, but for as fittle used a moderate heating Is obtained from electric currents taken during "off peak" periods. In a textile factory where yarn was formerly dried by air passing over steam pipes, the heat is now supplied by 48 electrie resistance heaters, behind which wide nets are placed to catch sparies in case of a short circuit.
